INSURANCE BROKER LIABILITY; WHEN DOES CLAIM ACCRUE?

Bond v. Progressive Ins. Co. (Garry, J., 3/3/11)

A 1999 accident between a snowmobile and a car led to a 2002 lawsuit, about which the defendants notified their insurance broker. But the broker never informed defendants' liability insurer (Progressive) which led to a default and a $1.2 million judgment on damages. The insurer refused to pay the judgment and the defendants assigned their claims against the broker to the plaintiffs. Supreme Court (Reilly, J., Schenectady Co.) denied the broker's motion to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims as time-barred (the suit against the broker was filed more than 7 years after the accident). Addressing for the first time when a cause of action against an insurance broker accrues for failure to give proper notice to an insurer, the Third Department reasoned that the moment of accrual is not "at the time of the defendant's wrongful act or the plaintiff's discovery of the injury, but when harm is sustained". In this scenario, the breach caused

MATRIMONIAL UPDATE

"The old theory was marry an older man, because they're more mature. But the new theory is: Men don't mature. Marry a younger one."

- Rita Rudner

"You know, of course, that the Tasmanians, who never committed adultery, are now extinct."

- William Somerset Maugham

You knew I would have it all wrong. With the advent of any legislative change to our little matrimonial world, the pundits come out of the woodwork because (a) no one really knows the answer and (b) it is fun to handicap the workings of the judicial mind. So, when no fault rolled around the day after Columbus Day, 2010, I had the pleasure of adding my two cents to the crystal ball folks. After all, it would be months before some trial court weighed in on the issues and about half a year before things trickled up to the Appellate Divisions. By then, no one would remember harm when the judgment was entered (2008), and therefore the suit against the broker was timely.

EXPERT PROOF SUFFICIENT; SUMMARY JUDGMENT REVERSED

Alexander v. Dunlop Tire Corp. (McCarthy, J., 2/17/11)

Plaintiffs in two cases arising out of the same tragic auto crash blamed the accident on tread separation failure of the left rear tire which was manufactured by the defendant. Dunlop won summary judgment after plaintiffs' expert's opinions were excluded as unreliable and unsupported by the relevant scientific community. Supreme Court (Tait, J., Broome Co.) conducted a Frye hearing and found that the expert's method of testing was acceptable but his conclusion of product failure could not be supported. Reversing and reinstating plaintiffs' cases, the Third Department found Frye was not applicable (defendant was not challenging a novel scientific theory) and that the expert's "process of elimination" theory of product failure had a sufficient evidentiary foundation and should not have been excluded.

PREMISES LIABILITY

Norse v. Saratoga Harness Racing, Inc. (Malone, J., 2/10/11)

Plaintiff claimed injuries resulting from her stumble and fall near the mosaic tiles at the entrance to the defendant's property. Supreme Court (Hall, J., Saratoga Co.) denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment and the Third Department affirmed. While the defendant's proof did establish a lack of actual or constructive notice of the allegedly dangerous condition, summary judgment was not appropriate because of the lack of evidence regarding how the tiles were installed, inspected and maintained.

Olmsted v. Pizza Hut (Rose, J., 2/24/11)

Plaintiff, while working at defendant's premises in 1999, received an electrical shock. In her suit for damages, the trial court in 2008 resolved liability in favor of plaintiff after finding the defendant willfully failed to produce a witness with knowledge of the property's electrical system and installation. A trial on damages resulted in a verdict of slightly more than $15,000, none of which was for future medical expenses or pain and suffering. Supreme Court (Cerio, Jr., J., Madison Co.) denied plaintiff's post-trial motion to add to the damages and the Third Department affirmed, noting a sharp conflict in the evidence regarding permanency of the plaintiff's injuries and "serious doubt" having been cast upon the plaintiff's credibility.

Castle v. Six Flags, Inc. (Spain, J.P., 2/17/11)

At the defendant's Lake George amusement park, the plaintiff tripped and fell on a lip created by a height differential between two concrete slabs on a ramp leading to restrooms. Her case was dismissed by Supreme Court (Krogmann, J., Warren Co.) and the Third Department affirmed. While acknowledging that "there is no predetermined height differential that renders a defect trivial", the Court found proper the trial court's determination that the alleged defect here (1 to 1 ¼ inches) was trivial as a matter of law.

Carpenter v. Giardino, LLC (Peters, J.P., 2/24/11)

Plaintiff sued for damages that he claimed resulted from a fall on a sidewalk and contended the accident was caused by a patch of ice that had formed from water leaking out of a defective drain-pipe. Finding questions of fact on constructive notice and whether the defendant created the allegedly dangerous condition, Supreme Court (Catena, J., Montgomery Co.) denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The Third Department, however, reversed and dismissed the plaintiffs' case, finding insufficient evidence of a recurring unsafe condition that might establish constructive notice and a similar lack of objective proof (such as weather data or measurements of the grade of the sidewalk) showing the defendant created an icy hazard.

COURT CAN'T AGREE ON "SERIOUS INJURY"

MacMillan v. Cleveland (Garry, J., 3/10/11)

Medical reports and opinions were abundant in the dispute whether plaintiff sustained a "serious injury" (Insurance Law § 5102 (d)) and Supreme Court (Devine, J., Schoharie Co.) granted defendant summary judgment, concluding insufficient evidence under the "significant limitation of use" and "90/180 days" categories.

The claim was muddied by plaintiff's "long history of back pain" that pre-existed the auto accident plus 3 separate injuries within 8 months before the crash happened. With 2 dissenting judges, the Third Department reversed and reinstated plaintiff's lawsuit, concluding sufficient medical proof existed in the affidavits of plaintiff's physician and chiropractor, as well as reports by orthopedic surgeons hired by no-fault and worker's compensation insurers.

LABOR LAW

Randall v. Time Warner Cable, Inc. (Garry, J., 2/17/11)

Plaintiff, upgrading a customer's cable TV service and adding a new cable line in a bedroom, was on a 28-foot extension ladder at the conclusion of the project (replacing a filter on the outside cable wires). The ladder slid sideways; plaintiff jumped off and was hurt when he hit the ground. Supreme Court (Demarest, J., St. Lawrence Co.) denied plaintiff's summary judgment on liability under Labor Law § 240(1), finding that the work being done at the time of the fall did not constitute an "alteration" as defined in statute. The Third Department reversed, agreeing with plaintiff that the trial court improperly isolated "the moment of injury" and ignored the general context of the work, noting that even though the filter replacement was the only work performed outside the customer's house, it was "part of and not separate from the work that constituted alteration" within the protective scope of § 240(1).

what I said, right? So I opined that you could not bring a no fault divorce if a fault divorce had been commenced before Columbus Day. Also, since one spouse can declare the marriage irretrievably broken, how could there be any issue of fault? So jury and nonjury fault trials would be a thing of the past. Well, we now have the first rumblings from the trial bench and it seems I was wrong on both counts. In Heintz v. Heintz, Mrs. Heintz commenced an action on October 1, 2010, presumably to avoid those nasty legal counsel fee and maintenance presumptions of the new laws. On November 24, 2010 Mr. Heintz filed for divorce under the no fault statute, and then he appeared in Mrs. Heintz' action on December 1. Since you cannot have two lawsuits seeking the same relief, Mrs. Heintz moved to dismiss. Under my view of the world, the motion should be granted but Justice Daniel Palmieri held otherwise, citing the Court of Appeals case of Mot-ler which held no such thing. Motler allowed someone to withdraw a counterclaim to get the benefit of the then-new Equitable Distribution law, but it did not hold that the new action could proceed while the old action was pending.

Closer to home I went 0 for 2 with a decision of the Fourth District's Supreme Court Justice Robert Muller in Strack v. Strack. Here a no fault divorce was commenced and a motion to dismiss was made because (a) the complaint lacked particularity, (b) there was no statement under oath that the marriage was irretrievably broken for six or more months as required by Domestic Relations Law Section 170(7), and the statute of limitations! This last argument is beyond me, since irretrievable means irretrievable. It cannot be irretrievable 6 years ago but retrievable today, could it? I guess so as Justice Muller held that the five year statute of limitations applies. Brushing aside my view that you cannot have a serious trial on fault anymore, at least if California and other states are to be believed, Justice Muller states that there is not only a right to a trial of this issue, but a jury trial also if anyone is so foolish. "I don't care what she says, I can retrieve this marriage, especially if I have to pay those damn maintenance guidelines." He does wisely opine that the view of whether a marriage is irretrievable does not have to be shared by both parties and he sets the fault issue down for a trial before the other stuff gets sorted out.

Oh well. Until these issues get to the appellate courts, they are at least something to talk about in a Memo of Law or a cold brew on a Friday night at Sperry's.

As we all know, the prime determiner of child support is the income of the noncustodial spouse. Sure we pay lip service to all other issues, but for the most part the biggest factor is income. When it comes to that pesky $130,000 cap that has been around since January of 2010, you do get into need, so the more you need the more you are likely to blast through that cap. Although the Third Department has blasted through the cap to the extent of $500,000, don't rely on that. I was thinking of all this when I read about the lovely Laura Govan, the wife of Gilbert Jay Arenas, Jr., a gifted basketball player currently toiling for the Orlando Magic. It seems Ms. Govan recently submitted a budget in her support claim for what she needs to hold body and soul together for herself and three cherubs. Clothes for the kiddies? $8,000 per month on the old American Express black card. Housekeepers (but no nanny)? $5,000 per month. Landscaping? $100,000. Train set? $100,000. Just a car wash costs $675. A trip to FAO Schwartz for some kid's toys? $35,000. Heck, $5,000 a month just to feed the sharks in the backyard pool and grotto. When you consider that the oldest child is five, this is some kind of loot. If she needs a job, I'll hire her to help my clients fill out that nasty Statement of Net Worth that the Office of Court Administration requires. As for Mr. Arenas' attorney, a guy named David Cornwall, he says Ms. Govan's claims contain "numerous inaccuracies and inflammatory statements by a disgruntled and vindictive woman." Nice. I wonder what kind of California Civility Rules allows him to say something like that in public?

Finally I would like to thank our Chief Judge Jonathan Lippman for approving for Public Comment a new Rule 151 of the Chief Administrator of the Courts. This rule prohibits a judge from being assigned to a case if the lawyer has contributed $2,500 or more to that judge's campaign for elective office within two years. Personally I am not much of a contributor to judicial campaigns, but I have few judges who have not seen eye to eye with me over the years who will be getting a nice bi-annual check even if he or she is not running for a decade or so. Even though a judge is prohibited from knowing the amount of any contribution, this is a nice way to reinstitute the ancient practice of judge shopping to our upstate lexicon. I daresay it only takes a few dozen lawyers to conflict out every elected Supreme Court and Family Court Judge in the Capital District so a nice industry could be fashioned to pick and choose via the use of "trial counsel" for any particular case. In fact, I am filing next week the Get Rid of Your Judge, LLC with the Secretary of State. Anyone want to become a member?

ⁱHeintz v. Heintz, __ Misc.2nd __ (Sup.Ct. Nassau Cop., February 16, 2011)

ⁱⁱ60 N.Y.2nd 244 (1983)

ⁱⁱⁱStrack v. Strack, __

^{iv}Misc.2nd __ (Sup.Ct. Essex Co., February 3, 2011)

The exact language is that, "The relationship between husband and wife has broken down irretrievably for a period of at least six months, provided that one party has so stated under oath."

^vDomestic Relations Law §210 ^{vi}Bean v. Bean, 53 A.D.3rd 718 (Third Dept., 2008)

^{vii}Actually there are voluntary guidelines with this specific rule for Family Law Practitioners: "An attorney should treat all participants with courtesy and respect in order to minimize the emotional intensity of a family dispute." OK, Mr. Cornwall?
